All the Planets at Home

Each planet has a sign it is most comfortable in and a house it belongs with. Astrologers say the planet “rules” that sign and house or that it is “at home” there. In the following diagram, you’ll find the symbol for each planet inside the house it rules, along with the sign it rules. Astrologers call this the “natural chart.” Mercury is listed twice because it rules two signs instead of just one. Ceres, largest of the asteroids and Earth Mother archetype, is listed as ruler of Taurus.

The Natural Chart

One Analogy That Puts It All Together: Your Astrological Chart as the Theater of Your Life

Your chart may seem strange at first, and filled with mysterious symbols, but each symbol shown, and the exact placement of it, reveals worlds of information about your personality. Look at the chart as if it's a theater, playing the grand drama of your life. In it, we discover characters (the planets), the costumes they are wearing (the zodiac signs, which the planets are placed in) and scenery or settings (the houses the planets occupy).

Each character has a costume that naturally belongs to it and a setting it belongs in, and each character also has costumes that don't fit very well and settings that are naturally uncomfortable. In astrology, this is called "rulership," so we say that "Mars rules Aries and the First House" because Aries is the sign Mars rules and the First House is Mars' house. In general, a planet is very comfortable when placed in its own sign or house, which it 'rules.'

Every chart is a complex and interesting mix of planets, signs and houses. It's as if the director suddenly called out "Places, everyone!" and the characters made a mad dash for the costume room, throwing on whatever they could find, then ran to the stage and froze for the curtain in whatever setting they happened to find themselves.

There's one more layer to it, and it's that the planets / characters have relationships with each other. These relationships act as scripts and cause the characters to relate with each other in particular ways, naturally tending to either help or interfere with each other's agendas. These 'scripts' are called the aspects. Put the whole drama together and you have a fascinating portrait of a human being!
